Middlebury In The News

Professor Hathaway Dies at Age of 82

Lewis Jackson Hathaway, Professor Emeritus of Music died in Middlebury on December 27 at the age of 82. During the twenty-five years prior to his retirement in 1941 Professor Hathaway was head of the Middlebury College Music Department. He was Assistant Professor of Music from 1916 to 1919 when he became Professor of Music.

Professor Hathaway served for eight years as Conductor of the Vermont Choral Society and for four years as President of the Vermont Symphony Orchestra Association. Since his retirement he had been organist and Director of Music at the Congregational Church in Middlebury. He is survived by his daughter Mrs. Kenneth E. (Susan L. Hathaway, '37) Hopper and three grandchildren.

Fire Destroys College Playhouse

A fire of unknown origin destroyed the Middlebury College Playhouse on December 24th. The fire started in the storage basement of the 114-year old building but the cause was undetermined. The building was insured by the College for the maximum of $50,000 allowed by the insurance company. However, College authorities say that it will take several thousand dollars more than the insurance payment allowed to replace the Playhouse and its valuable contents.

The fire was discovered at 5:40 A.M. by the College night watchman. The Middlebury Fire Department fought the blaze in freezing weather. Firemen were unable to get close to the building because of falling bricks.

The steeple and walls of the Playhouse collapsed at 6:30 A.M. Firemen were forced to pull down sections of some walls as a safety measure. Only part of the walls remain standing. All equipment inside the building was lost, including property belonging to the Drama Department, lighting equipment, recording equipment and all the records in the faculty offices of Erie T. Volkert, Frederick Bowman and James Van Wart. Mr. Volkert is Director of the College Playhouse and Associate Professor of Drama. Mr. Bowman and Mr. Van Wart are instructors.

Also lost in the fire was a collection of costumes made by Professor Volkert during the past twenty years and which are considered irreplaceable.

The building housing the College Playhouse was erected in 1839 as the first Catholic Church in Middlebury. For the past 53 years it has served as a Playhouse and dramatic center for the College. Upon completion of St. Mary's Church in Middlebury in 1910, the College purchased the former church building on Weybridge Street and since that date it has been used for classes in speech and for plays.

Drama classes have been shifted to Room 303, Munroe Hall, where there is a stage that can be utilized. Faculty offices for members of the Drama Department have been established in the Gables, College owned house adjacent to the Scene Shop on Weybridge Street and a short distance from the burned out Playhouse. Rehearsals for the Winter Carnival Play, "The Man Who Came to Dinner" are being held at the Gables by the College Players.

As the news of the fire reached friends of Middlebury, offers of financial aid were received by the College. Two residents of the Town of Middlebury sent the College eleven dollars with note stating "their appreciation of the past performances in the Playhouse."

1. As a safety measure firemen pull down wall of College Playhouse following disasterous fire. 2. Despite valiant efforts of Middlebury Fire Department, which fought the fire in extreme cold weather, it was unable to save the building from complete destruction. The fire had a good start before it was discovered and was burning fiercely when the firemen arrived at the scene. 3. Pre-dawn flames of the burning Playhouse could be seen for miles. 4. Many Alumni-ae will remember the Playhouse as it appears in this painting. 5. Erie T. Volkert, Director of the Playhouse and Associate Professor of Drama, is shown atop a ladder during the height of the fire reaching through a window into his office trying to rescue records from his desk inside the building. A moment after this picture was taken an eight by ten foot portion of the cornice above him gave way, knocking him from the ladder and injuring his back. Two firemen were also hurt. 6. and 7. Views of the College Playhouse taken after the fire which started from an undetermined origin and in a very short time left only these crumbled brick walls standing. A valuable collection of stage properties and scenery was destroyed in the blaze.

encourage the talents of the neophytes in Players through a program of training and supervision. The officers of Wig and Pen also work with the directors in selecting the full length plays, and its members often have the best opportunities for acting because of their greater experience. Tryouts, however, are open to all and every cast has as many new names as old on its roster. In general, when responsibility and skill are required in directing, staging or lighting other campus functions of any kind, Wig and Pen members are called on for assistance.

Historical review

Students at Middlebury today take for granted such an organization as the Wig and Pen with its special opportunities and responsibilities. Actually there seems to be no record of anything quite like it in College history. Early records of the College report the formation of a Dramatic Association as early as 1881. This Association had seven members and Professor Higley was its President. It is not clear whether it was a play-reading society or one that produced plays. At any rate it apparently did not last long as the historical record is spotty for a number of years. Organizations came and went. A good many one-acts were produced by students, and Junior Class plays were performed with fair regularity in spring from the beginning of the century on. An entry in the Kaleidoscope of 1911 paints a fairly clear picture:

"Dramatics have until recently played a minor part in the activities of the College, but in view of the increasing interest a meeting was called early in the year for the purpose of forming a College Dramatic Club . . . ."

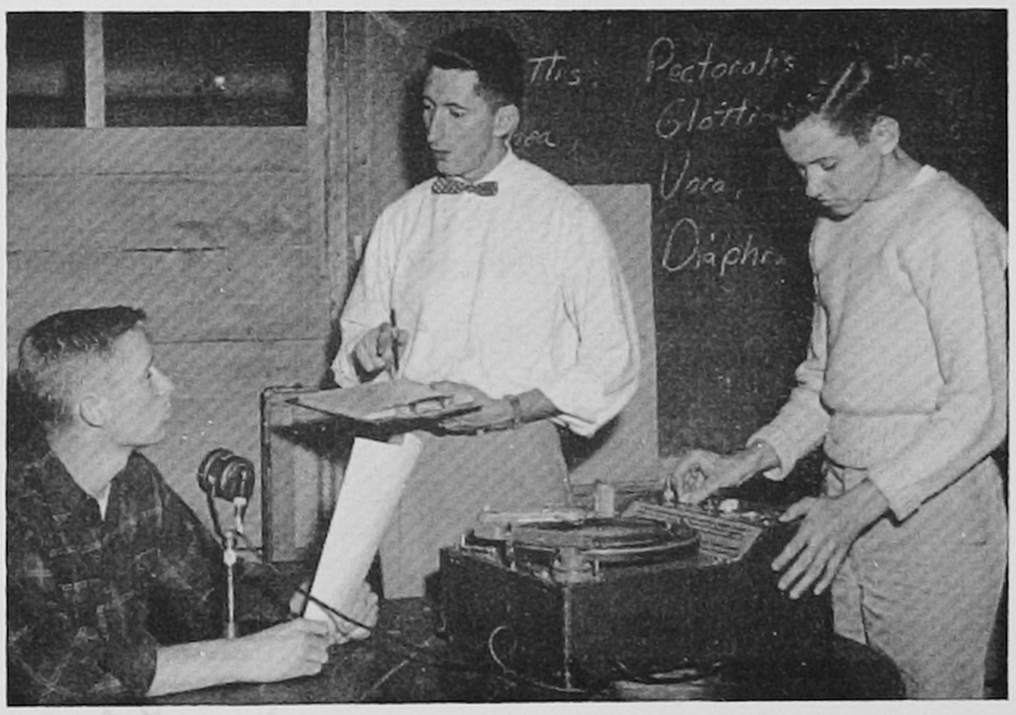
A group which was organized in the fall of 1909, ran into production trouble, and finally decided to repeat the smash hit of the previous season, Half-Back Sandy. This performance [Continued on page 18]

A dress of the 20th Century is discovered among the costumes of Renaissance Italy while sorting, modeling and classifying the 700 opera costumes in the basement of Forest Hall. Costumes are a gift to the College by Mr. and Mrs. Aron Pressman of the Russian Summer School. Left to right, are: Sylvia Cosman, '56; Christine de Kiewiet, '55; Georgiana Ward, '55; and, Mrs. David Littlefield, Secretary for the Playhouse.



Frederick B. Bowman, Instructor of Speech and Drama, instructs in correct articulation during an individual recording for voice analysis. Both disc and tape recorders are used in helping students to improve their speech. Left to right, are: Charles Dodson, '57; Mr. Bowman; and, William Burgess, '57. Mr. Bowman is also Coach of Debate.

Editor's Note: "Drama at Middlebury College" was written by Professor Volkert for the News Letter several weeks before the fire of December 24th wiped out the College Playhouse. This article is especially timely as it illustrates the importance of the College Playhouse in the life of the college.

Drama at Middlebury College

By Erie T. Volkert, Associate Professor of Drama

The College Playhouse on Weybridge Street is one of the busiest spots in Middlebury these days. During the past few years Playhouse equipment and activities have increased and expanded so that a returning Alumnus today looking around the Playhouse would discover numerous constructive changes in the physical plant and equipment.

The College budget for the operations of the Playhouse is supplemented by income from public performances. Here at the Playhouse the student dramatic organizations of Wig and Pen and the Players work together with the faculty directors in selecting the yearly program of plays and organizing the responsibilities of production, promotion and performance. A regular College year's program consists of three major productions and one or more evenings of one-act plays. This program is supplemented by other one-act plays directed by students of the Directing Course and occasional "originals" written by students of a course in playwriting. This is the basic program.

Playhouse center of activity

In recent years, however, the Playhouse has also become the supply center for the Carnival Ice Show, the Concert Series, the Junior Class Variety Show and numerous balls. Each year its doors are opened to rehearsals and performances of a faculty play for the benefit of Porter Hospital. Also when occasion arises, the staff and student organizations cooperate with the Music Department in presenting a full-scale choral production. This was done last spring when the two departments combined to present an operatic staging of Mendelssohn's Elijah with a cast and chorus of ninety students and the accompaniment of the Vermont State Symphony.

A comprehensive program of this kind implies a favorable balance between the academic and the extracurricular, between faculty responsibility and student responsibility. A working balance of these forces exists at the Playhouse. It is perhaps tentative and imperfect; at times it is certainly inefficient; at other times it moves mountains. There is undoubtedly an inherent tension between the two forces, but tension produces energy and energy produces "fire." It produces both the beautiful and the grotesque, but most important—it works.

Importance of Wig and Pen

At one end of the balance is a highly effective student organization, Wig and Pen, composed of those students who have earned 150 points by participation in two or more of the theatre activities. These include acting, prompting, scene construction and painting, lighting, properties, makeup, business, publicity and so on. Barbara Hammann, '55, president and her predecessors beginning with Katherine Kurtz, '42, have developed Wig and Pen into a responsible group whose members act as chairmen of production crews, and Wig and Pen members under the direction of Mr. Van Wart cut and assemble plywood scenery for a production at the Scene Shop which is housed in a barn next to the Homestead on Weybridge St. Left to right, are: Judith Berry, '55; Mr. Van Wart, '48, Instructor and Assistant Director; Lynn Fisher, '55 (kneeling); David Bridges '55, John Knecht, '55.

Successful Religious Emphasis Program Held by Students

Large and enthusiastic crowds attended all sessions of the Religious Emphasis Program sponsored by Middlebury College students for the first time December 5–6. Estimated audiences of 500 students and townspeople filled Mead Memorial Chapel to hear addresses by a Jewish philosopher, a Catholic priest, and a Protestant minister.

The three speakers shared one basic view—that each person faces the personal problem of making sacrement to his God in his own way. Then, if man sincerely does this task, he treads on safe ground, according to the three speakers. Throughout the program these guest speakers strove to pinpoint the discussions to the program topic—Religion in Life—and thus set aside some irrelevant —for this program—tenets of each faith.

Dr. Will Herberg, Jewish theologian and social researcher, talked of man's everyday anxiety which springs from man's knowledge of his own limitations and possibilities. He divided man's anxiety into three parts. External anxiety, such as economic security, is solved by technology. Neurotic anxiety is met with psychotherapy. The third, existentialism, must be met with faith to produce courage to meet problems out of human existence.

Father John K. Daly, counselor of Catholic students at Columbia University, described Catholicism as not a philosophy, but an experience. The main concept of Catholicism, said the priest, is that God is in our midst, at our elbow. By appealing to man on his emotional level, Catholicism protects man from himself; the Church heirarchy prevents man from ruling himself, reminding him to be ruled by God; and the Liturgy of the Catholic Church protects man against anarchy, said Father Daly.

Rev. William A. Spurrier, an Episcopalian minister now chaplain of Wesleyan University, pointed out that man is both good and bad, and the badness comes from self interest and pride. These two comprise the sin of man, but fortunately man is redeemable, Reverend Spurrier stressed. He told his audience that unless Christ is Divine, His death is only a triumph of evil. Protestants believe in a Living Christ, and that is the Good News for civilization, said the minister.

Announce Football Schedule for 1954

Middlebury announces a seven-game football schedule for 1954 which includes two opponents not played in postwar years. Colby, last met in 1942, replaces Trinity on the schedule. Tufts goes off the schedule in place of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute which last played Middlebury in 1945.

The schedule: Sept. 25, Wesleyan at Middlebury; Oct. 2, Colby at Middlebury; Oct. 9, Williams at Williamstown, Mass ; Oct. 16, Bates at Lewiston, Maine; Oct. 23, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute at Middlebury; Oct. 30, Norwich at Middlebury; and Nov. 6, Vermont at Burlington.

Readmission Policy . . .

The College announced in early January a change in policy with regard to readmission after academic failure. The new regulation reads as follows: "A student who is dropped in June for academic failure may not be considered for readmission by the Deans or Administration Committee until he has satisfactorily completed one academic year at another accredited institution; a student dropped at mid-years, however, may apply for readmission the following September provided he has obtained a satisfactory record for one semester and one summer session at accredited institutions. It is understood that exceptions may be made for veterans."

Freshmen Marks Improve

Mid-semester marks of freshman men show a marked improvement in comparison with last year.

In statistics compiled by the office of the Dean of Men, it is shown that 52 men have all six grades above 70 this year, while only 22 men had similar grades last fall. The improvement is also indicated by the fact that seven men had all six grades below 70 last year while only one falls into that category this year.

Other pertinent facts include the following comparison: those men with five grades below 70—in 1952, 23, 1953, 7; those with four grades below 70—in 1952, 34, 1953, 20; those with three grades below 70—in 1952, 39, 1953, 34; those with two grades below 70—in 1952, 54, 1953, 48; those with one grade below 70—in 1952, 38, 1953, 39.

Check List for Alumni-ae

Editor's Note: In "General Education in School and College," a report prepared by secondary school and university educators and published last spring by Harvard University Press, one chapter is devoted to "The Essentials of a Liberal Education." There the authors pause to describe their ideal of "the liberally-educated man." The qualities possessed by this paragon of perfection provide a checklist against which the liberally-educated alumnus, or alumna, may measure how he or she is doing. The quotation follows:

¶ The liberally-educated man is articulate, both in speech and writing.

¶ He has a feel for language, a respect for clarity and directness of expression, and a knowledge of some language other than his own.

¶ He is at home in the world of quantity, number and measurement.

¶ He thinks rationally, logically, objectively, and knows the difference between fact and opinion. When the occasion demands, however, his thought is imaginative and creative rather than logical.

¶ He is perceptive, sensitive to form, and affected by beauty.

¶ His mind is flexible and adaptable, curious and independent.

¶ He knows a good deal about the world of nature and the world of man, about the culture of which he is a part, but he is never merely "well-informed."

¶ He can use what he knows, with judgment and discrimination.

¶ He thinks of his business or profession, his family life and his avocations as parts of a larger whole, parts of a purpose which he has made his own. Whether making a professional or a personal decision, he acts with maturity, balance and perspective, which comes ultimately from his knowledge of other persons, other problems, other times and places.

¶ He has convictions which are reasoned, although he cannot always prove them.

¶ He is tolerant about the beliefs of others because he respects sincerity and is not afraid of ideas.

¶ He has values, and he can communicate them to others not only by word but by example.

¶ His personal standards are high; nothing short of excellence will satisfy him. But service to his society or to his God, not personal satisfaction alone, is the purpose of his excelling.

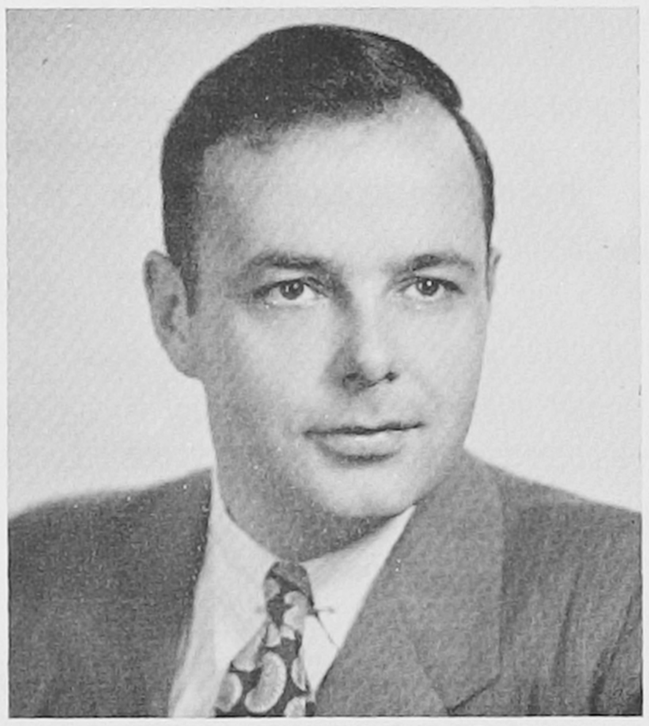
¶ Above all, the liberally-educated man is never a type. He is always a unique person, vivid in his distinction from other similarly educated persons, while sharing with them the traits we have mentioned.

Any person feeling that he has passed the test, no matter what the marking system, should bear in mind one additional qualification not covered above. The liberally-educated man or woman possesses, above all, humility.

Schools Abroad . . .

Sixty-six American men and women are now enrolled at the Middlebury College graduate schools abroad. The Graduate School of French in France has 36 students, and 30 are enrolled at the Graduate School of Spanish in Spain. Of the 66 students, 41 have prepared for study abroad by attending Middlebury's Summer Language Schools at Middlebury. Four are highly qualified undergraduates—the rest have at least a bachelor's degree, and their undergraduate work was completed at 39 different American colleges.

Alumni in the Headlines



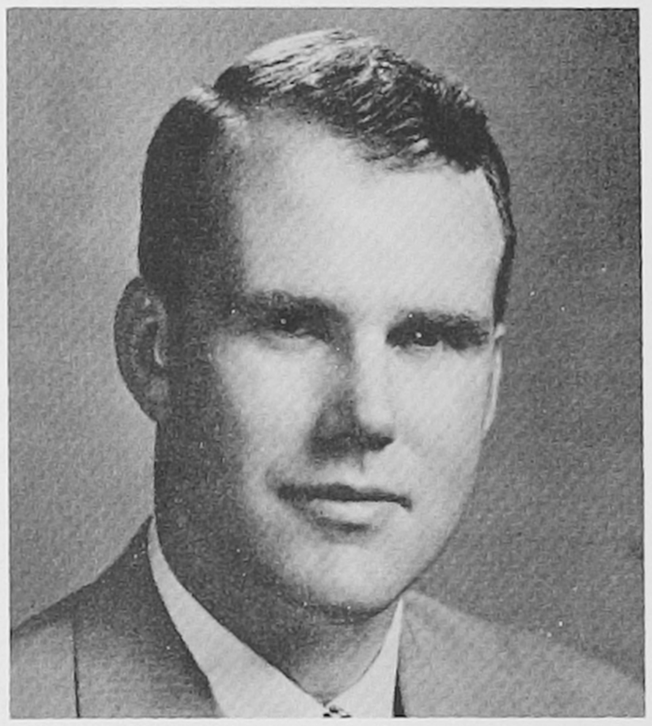
TRAVIS E. HARRIS, '34

Mr. Harris, a member of the English Department at Culver Military Academy since 1942 is teaching in Denmark for the current school year under a Fulbright Teaching Grant. He has been assigned to the Oregaard (High School) Gymnasium in Copenhagen where he is teaching English and American Literature.

Selection of Fulbright Fellows is based on the idea that they will be unofficial ambassadors of America, and the committee on Foreign Scholarships, which makes the selection, is anxious to get large families abroad. The Harris family qualifies in this respect with three sons ranging in age from 14 to 3, and with one daughter, aged 7. The 15,000 candidates, who apply annually for the various Fulbright posts are screened by the State Department and the Office of Education. The above named committee of educators, appointed by the President makes the final selection, which is final only after approval by the country to which the individual is assigned.

COMSTOCK SMALL, '47

Mr. Small, a Fullbright Fellow, has been appointed Instructor in Geology at Trinity College, Hartford, Conn. Prior to accepting the Trinity appointment he taught in the Department of Geography at George Washington University, Washington, D.C. Mr. Small had a Fulbright Fellowship in Italy during 1952.

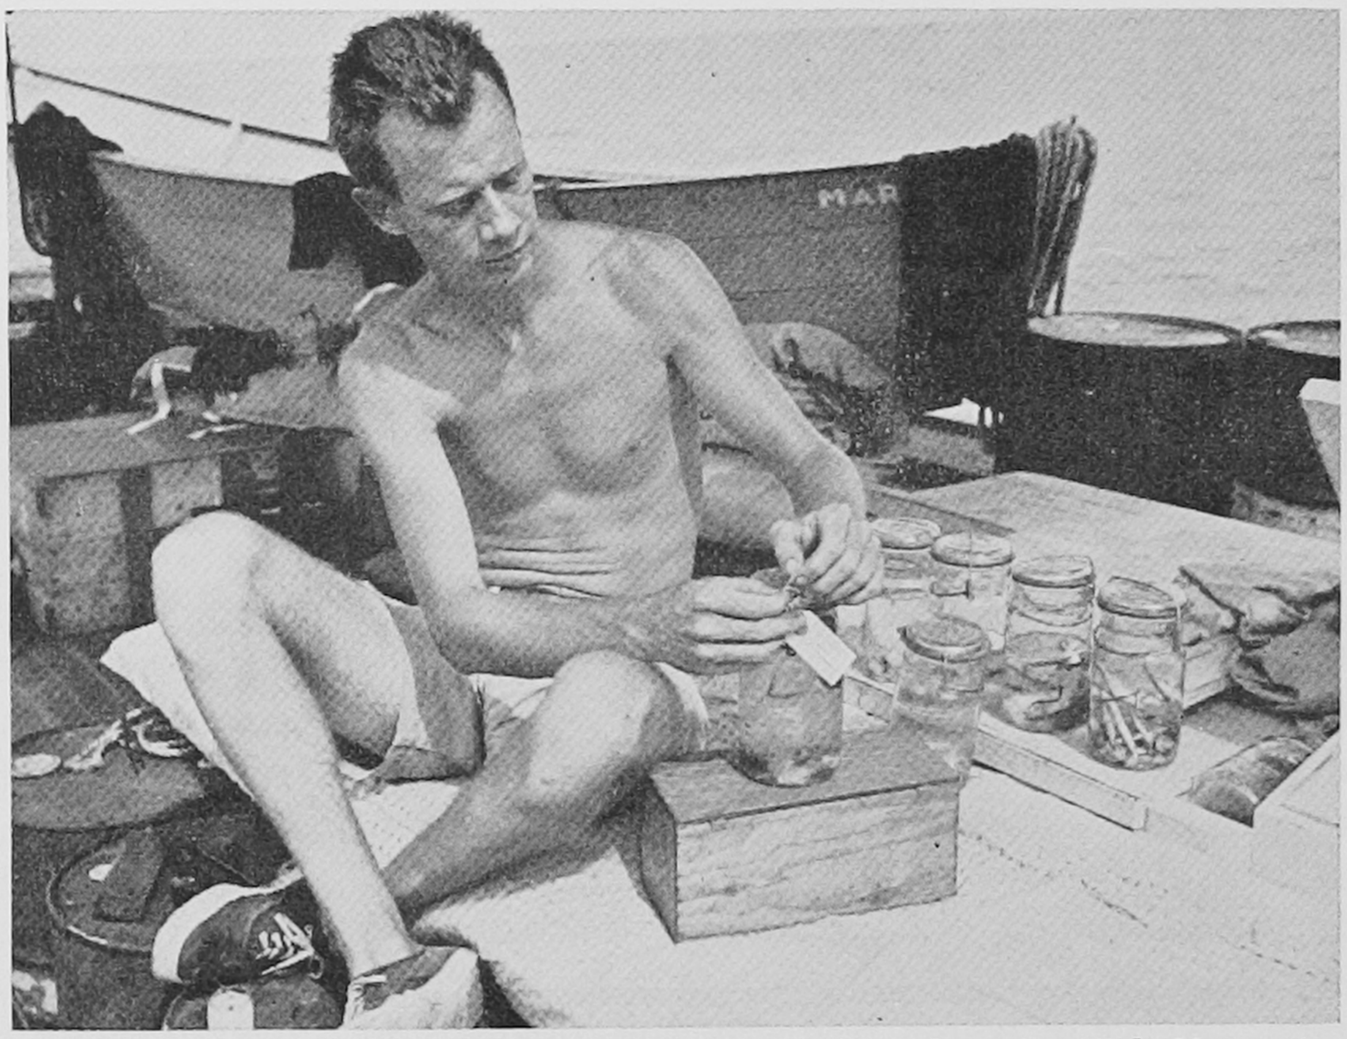


PHILIP CLARKE, '51

Mr. Clarke is attending the University of Edinburgh, Scotland, during the present academic year as a Rotary Foundation Fellow. He is one of 101 outstanding graduate students from 32 countries to receive the Rotary grant this year. As a senior at Middlebury he was awarded the Charles Baker Wright Scholarship.

AMY (Hunt) MEEK, '24

Mrs. Meek is President of the Greater Boston Council of Girl Scouts. No one knows the value of scouting more than Mrs. Meek, who has served on the Board of Greater Boston Council for last five years as committee chairman, vice-president and now as president. Mrs. Meek's husband is the popular pastor of Boston's Old South Church.



JAMES E. MORROW, '40, was Chief Scientist in the recent Yale University expedition to the Humboldt Current off South America's west coast. The purpose of the expedition was to study big-game fish. Dr. Morrow says that the Humboldt Current is one of the most interesting and highly productive bodies in the world. "We believe," he said, "that we have obtained a wealth of new oceanographic and ichthyological information and that it will probably take at least three years to analyze properly and assess the expeditions findings." Dr. Morrow is shown (above) during the expedition labelling salps.

KEEP THE DOOR OPEN!

Middlebury College traditionally operates "in the black"—without Government help.

Like its students—like its Alumni and Alumnae—the College stands on its own feet.

Traditionally, too, Middlebury tries to keep the door open to the most promising young applicants who need scholarship aid.

One unfortunate consequence of soaring costs of obtaining a college education is the decrease in scope of Middlebury's scholarship program. To compensate for student's higher expenses, it has become necessary to give larger grants, and consequently fewer of them.

Middlebury College will continue to give qualified young people the maximum possible help. But rapidly rising operating costs are placing narrow limits on scholarship assistance.

Your help is urgently needed to keep the door open to young people who need—and deserve—scholarship aid.

of the program and committees of examiners meeting to prepare examinations to be administered in June 1954, the experiment is well under way in its second year.

As the NEWS LETTER is going to press in early December, we note that the Central Committee meets later this month to receive the reports on the actions of the twelve college faculties. On November 17th the Middlebury faculty, upon the recommendation of the Faculty Educational Policy Committee, voted unanimously "That Middlebury College approve the recommendations of the School and College Committee on Admission with Advanced Standing, and instruct the Chief Adviser, the Dean, and the Chairman of the Department concerned, to consider for advanced credit any freshman who qualifies, the assignment of such credit not to be considered as final until the end of the freshman year." Several other colleges are known to have taken similar action and it is hoped and expected that all twelve will announce ratification early in December. Our Directors of Admissions have already had inquiries from several young men and women now enrolled in the program at the pilot schools. It is not expected that the numbers of students will be large and only a very few will seek advanced standing with credit in more than one or two subjects. There are but 284 students enrolled in all pilot schools combined this academic year; most are taking one or two of the so-called "Honors Courses" although a few are trying to do more. At the Bronx High School of Science, for example, of a total enrollment of 2300 only 55 seniors have been chosen for the experiment; 9 are taking one honors subject; 31, two; 10, three; and 5, four subjects. At Horace Mann there are 43 taking one subject; 9, two; and 2, three.

The following features and observations of this unique plan and the decisions which have already been reached demonstrate the thoroughness of the study by the Central Committee:

1. No provision has been made to encourage our young people to enter college at an earlier age. A plan with similar objectives foundered recently at the University of Chicago when it was finally conceded that pushing students ahead of their age groups presents severe emotional and social complications.
2. The examinations to be given candidates at the end of the academic year 1953–54 will be of the essay or problem-solving type rather than multiple choice or completion tests so that proper emphasis can be placed on the students' abilities to express themselves. These identical examinations will be administered simultaneously to college freshmen at some of the participating institutions so that their results may be correlated with candidates' scores for ranking purposes.
3. No student is guaranteed admission to any of the participating colleges, either with or without advanced standing. He is still free to choose his college and will apply in the usual way. To avoid the situation which might arise if he were to shop around among the colleges for maximum credit, the Central Committee will report a candidate's examination scores and his rank only to the college where he has been admitted and is actually "aboard," and not in any case before September first. At Middlebury we shall apply the same procedure in the matter of credits that we use with all transfer students and withhold the actual assignment of any credit until a full year of work has been completed.
4. It is true that this proposal will mean acceleration for a few of the more able students: possibly some will finish college in three and one-half years or even three years with a summer session. There are many who feel that such able people should reach Professional school at an earlier age. But the main purpose of the plan is enrichment and greater appreciation through more intensive instruction in the secondary school where it is most needed. The candidates will learn college methods of study, will learn to dig deeper into a subject and to read extensively in its literature outside of class.
5. It is hoped that the program will have a salutary effect upon secondary school teachers and teaching. The introduction of these Honors Courses in a preparatory school should enhance its curriculum in much the same way that our honors program in college provides an open-upper-end to the offerings of any Department. Much good teaching has been wasted in secondary schools; young people will have greater respect and admiration for their teachers when they observe them at work as students intensely interested in the subject-matter.
6. This study in demanding closer cooperation between schools and colleges is certain to be beneficial to the faculties of both. It is to be hoped that better understanding will remove much of the skepticism with which each group has frequently regarded the efforts of the other.

For many years at Middlebury entering students have had the opportunity to qualify by examination for sophomore level courses. There are usually several freshmen in each class who have had the equivalent of English 11 in preparatory school and are able to qualify for a sophomore course in English literature. Frequently a freshman is prepared to go directly [Continued on page 19]

The School and College Study of Admission With Advanced Standing

By Professor John G. Bowker, Dean of the Faculty

At long last, a group of our leading educators supported by the Ford Foundation through the Fund for the Advancement of Education has brought forth a program of study which is geared to the more able young people in our schools. Millions of dollars are spent annually on courses labeled "remedial this" and "remedial that," and rightly so, but too little has been done to challenge the capacities of our brighter youth many of whom have lost the natural spark and enthusiasm for learning in what, for them, was a dull curriculum. Enough intensive instruction has never been provided at the proper time. Ever since the turn of the century there has been a tendency to concentrate upon the average (or lower) youngster to the neglect and detriment of the more able student.

THIS is the first of a series of articles by the Dean of the Faculty on subjects of educational interest to Alumni. Brief mention of the "Study of Admission With Advanced Standing" in the November issue of the News Letter resulted in your Editor receiving several letters requesting additional information. Dean Bowker was delighted to devote the first of his series of articles to this subject.

Three years ago in January of 1951, President Gordon K. Chalmers of Kenyon College invited a group of representatives of eleven colleges (another was later added) to meet at Washington. Fully realizing that the colleges have an opportunity to encourage able students to educate themselves over and above the regular course of study and accepting the widely supported idea that there is much waste in the usual 12th year secondary school program and the first year of college, they determined a procedure whereby agreement might be reached as to the standards of work in several fields of study which could be completed before admission to college and would be acceptable for advanced credit toward a college degree.

A Central Committee was formed with Dr. Chalmers as Chairman and Dr. William H. Cornog of the Central High School at Philadelphia as Executive Director. Plans were made to establish subject-matter committees to prepare syllabi of courses in the several subjects. Dr. Stephen Freeman, of Middlebury, was named to serve on the Central Committee of twenty-four men, twelve of whom represent the colleges and twelve certain secondary schools, private and public. The twelve colleges include: Bowdoin, Brown, Carleton, Haverford, Kenyon, M.I.T., Middlebury, Oberlin, Swarthmore, Wabash, Wesleyan and Williams. There are now twenty-seven secondary schools associated with the study including Andover, Exeter, Groton, Horace Mann, Lawrenceville, Bronx High School of Science, Central High of Philadelphia, Garden City High School, Newton (Mass.) High, and among others, three high schools in Providence. These were selected to be pilot schools in the program when it was found that they were staffed, able, and willing to undertake the necessary curriculum revisions so that work of college freshman level could be offered.

The year 1952–53 was devoted to the organization and intensive activity of the subject-matter committees in eleven fields: biology, chemistry, English composition, English literature, French, German, history, latin, mathematics, physics, and Spanish. Professor Richard L. Brown was Chairman of the committee on English composition; other members of our faculty who served as committee members or correspondents were Professors Ballou (Mathematics), Beers (Literature), Freeman (French), Guarnaccia (Spanish), Harnest (Chemistry), Hitchcock (Biology), Neuse (German), Tillinghast (History), White (Latin), and Wissler (Physics). Each of these committees was successful in reaching agreement on a definition of the standards and requirements of college freshman level work in the eleven subjects and their reports have now been submitted to the faculties of the participating colleges. With the first students already enrolled in the preparatory school phase

Fidelity to Freedom

On "The Rights and Responsibilities of Colleges and Universities and Their Faculties"

Editor's Note:—The News Letter thanks Dr. Samuel S. Stratton for relinquishing the editorial space allocated for the President's Page in this issue in order to allow ample room for the printing of the following report by the Association of American Universities. This report is timely and should be of interest to Alumni, Faculty and the many friends of Middlebury College. It was prepared by a committee of five college presidents for the Association of American Universities which often speaks for its members on policy matters of common interest. (Dr. Harold W. Dodds of Princeton is the present President of the Association.) The report was in preparation for six months. It is given in full here.

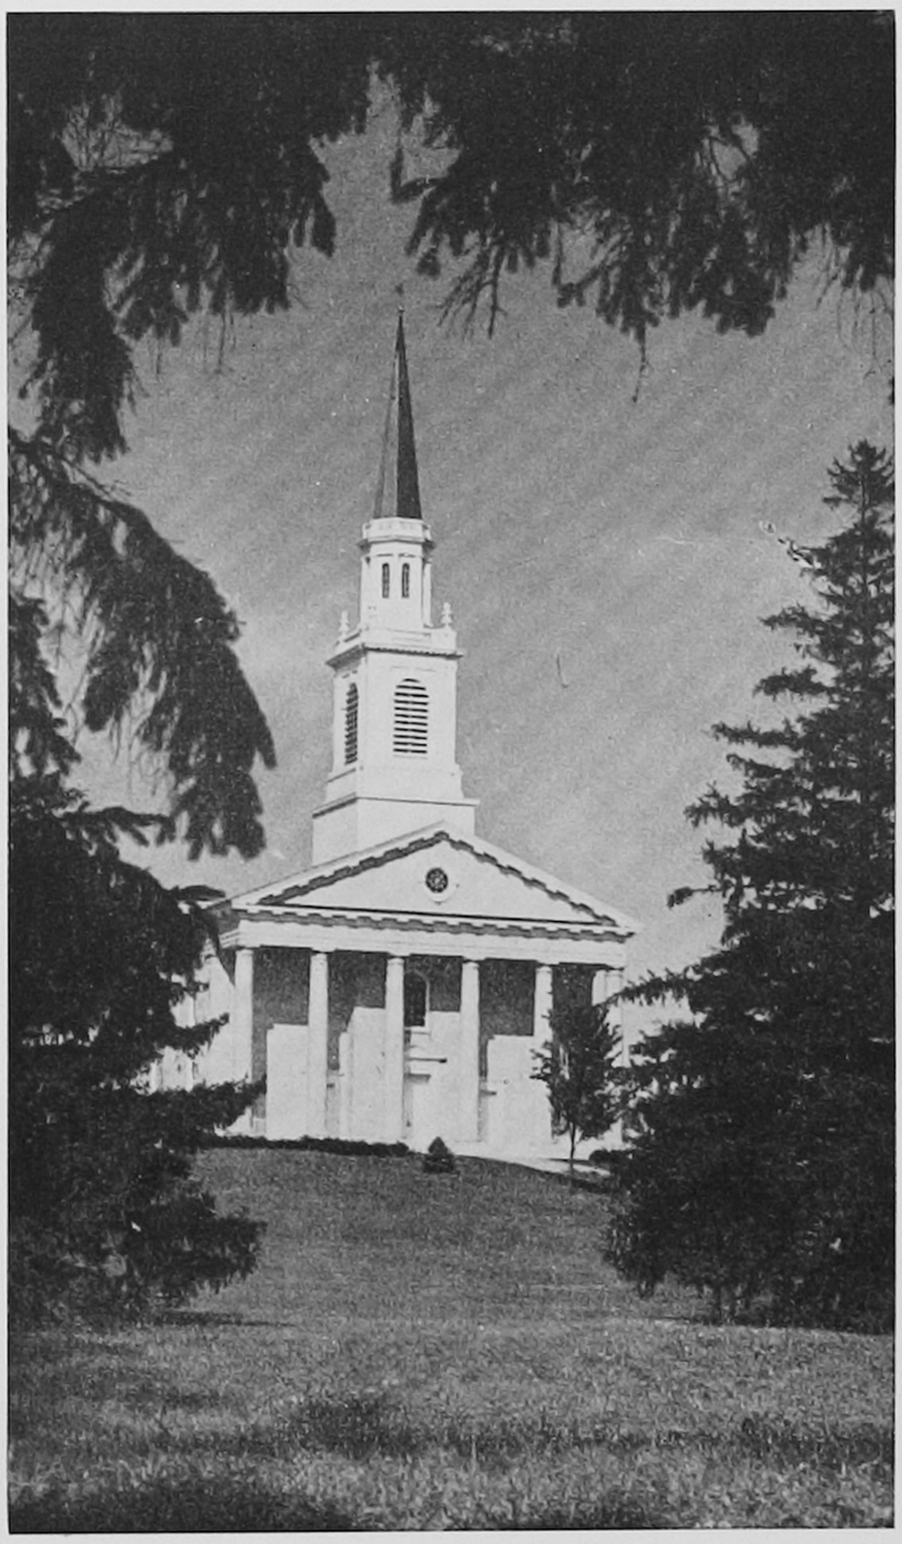
For three hundred years higher education has played a leading role in the advancement of American civilization. No country in history so early perceived the importance of that role and none has derived such widespread benefits from it. Colleges moved westward with the frontier and carried with them the seeds of learning. When the university idea was transplanted from Europe, it spread across the nation with extraordinary speed. Today our colleges and universities are the standard bearers of our whole system of education. They are the mainstays of the professions. They are the prime source of our competence in science and the arts. The names of their graduates crowd the honor rolls of two world wars and of the nation's peacetime affairs. By every test of war and peace they have proved themselves indispensable instruments of cultural progress and national welfare.

In the United States there is a greater degree of equality of opportunity in higher education than anywhere else in the world. A larger proportion of Americans study in universities and colleges than any other people. These universities have shown and continue to show greater responsiveness to the needs of our society than their European counterparts. They have equipped our people with the varied skills and sciences essential to the development of a pioneer country. They have imparted the shape and coherence of the American nation to formless immigrant groups. American ideals have been strengthened, the great cultural tradition of the West has been broadened, and enriched by their teaching and example.

Modern knowledge of ourselves and of our universe has been nurtured in the universities. The scientific, technological, medical, and surgical advances of our time were born in them. They have supplied intellectual capital as essential to our society as financial capital is to our industrial enterprise. They have more than justified the faith of the public in our distinctive system of higher education. They have proved themselves dynamic forces of American progress.



Search for Knowledge

A university is the institutional embodiment of an urge for knowledge that is basic in human nature and as old as the human race. It is inherent in every individual. The search that it inspires is an individual affairs. Men vary in the intensity of their passion for the search for knowledge as well as in their competence to pursue it. History therefore presents us with a series of scholarly pioneers who advanced our knowledge from age to age and increased our ability to discover new knowledge. Great scholars and teachers drew students to them, and in the Middle Ages a few such groups organized themselves into the first universities.

The modern university which evolved from these is

REPORTING THE STUDENT SIDE OF MIDDLEBURY NEWS

*John H. von Hartz, '55

Extracurricular activities have long been a bone of contention in higher educational circles. Educators are concerned with them as a distracting influence to the student who is anxious to be "well rounded." At Middlebury, with many and various clubs facing him, the entering freshman will often be too willing and burden himself with membership in order to write home and tell his parents how active he is in College Life. Disasterous results occur when valuable study time is taken up by meetings and errands. However, over-indulgence in extra-curricular activities claims the scholastic time of very few freshmen compared to the free student's arch enemy, yet constant companion, "Goof-off."

The extra-curricular activity, then, is not the student's Public Enemy Number One, but it often is Public Nuisance Number One. In clarifying this statement, let us examine class extra-curricular activities in two separate groups: (1) the Activity Sought, and (2) the Activity Awarded.

"Activities Sought" are such organizations as the different language clubs, the Campus, the college radio station, WRMC, the dance band, or any other organization in which the student seeks membership on his own volition, because his interests lie in that field. Students apply for membership and are accepted or rejected on their ability in that line of endeavor. Being a friend of a member of one of these organizations is very nice, but it will not help you play a better instrument in your College Band audition, or being the roommate of the editor of the Campus will not help you write a clear enough news story when you are trying out for the paper. Membership in these organizations is based on merit and ability on the part of the applicant.

"Activities Awarded" is composed of all honorary and appointive organizations such as Blue Key, I.F.C., Men's and Women's Assembly, Mortar Board. These organizations are made up of students who have been chosen by other organization members or elected to their office by the dormitory in which they live and because they are honorary organizations most members feel it an honor to belong to them.

Now that we have outlined the existing situation, we can better explain the extracurricular program that is apparent at Middlebury.

All the "Activities Sought" are working, interested groups. The language clubs give dances, parties, and sometimes movies. They meet periodically and discuss matters that are held in common by all the members. The Flying Panthers have their own planes and offer lessons at very nominal rates. WRMC broadcasts every day and is entirely student run, from engineer to announcer. The Chemistry majors have their Al-Chemist Club and those interested in a different style of expression have formed the Modern Dance Club. Rather than list all the "Activities Sought" here, let us rather point out that in each organization where work must be done by the student, it is done by his own choice so that his interest is keen. In each case, the members of an "Activity Sought" have a common meeting ground and a real reason for being together. This is the primary purpose for the extracurricular activity. The "Activity Sought" is the finest argument for integrated interests, within the College, yet outside the class-room.

Then, there are the "Activities Awarded." These organizations do certain categories of work around the campus, but their importance in College Life is far too exaggerated. Since being a member of one of these "Activities Awarded" is an honor, membership is sought by most members of the student body. As with most clubs, the honorary organizations are riddled with petty jobs that must be done either by an organization member, or by a student seeking membership. In the completion of these jobs, the student is wasting his time. Here is where the extracurricular activity takes time from study or valuable leisure hours.

In the upper classes these jobs probably don't affect the student's study habits and the only complaint might be one of inconvenience. However, in order to gain College recognition for acceptance into an "Activity Awarded," it is necessary for the student to be either a leader or a worker. Most student leaders have been recognized by the entire student body through their activities in sports. This leaves the student who isn't an athlete to load himself down with ridiculous chores if he wants to be selected for an honorary organization. The average student sees the waste of time involved and quickly abandons the idea of becoming a honored representative. However, there are many who feel the end is worth the means and continue to do the lion's share of the College community's little jobs. How many Dean's List potentials have been lost this way?

In considering these "Activities Awarded," we must also stress how in their lack of power to deal with the larger issues that are so ably handled by the Administration, organizations resort to minor questions. Let us take the Men's Assembly, for example. The Men's Assembly meets regularly but it lacks work enough to keep its legislative machine moving. As a result, it passes un-necessary laws and restrictions on the student body.

When extracurricular activities reach this point; when the members work just for the sake of being busy, the "Activity Awarded" has outlived its usefulness. And this is not only the case with student governments, but with many of the honor organizations. Their need for existence is slight indeed. Individuals could complete the duties of College Life more easily than a larger group. There are some students who enjoy organization, to them the jobs should fall. If individuals find they do not have enough work, they will rest. If an organization finds it is shy of work, it will trump up business for itself to keep all its members busy.

Now, in judging the importance of the extracurricular activity in College Life, we can see how the "Activity Sought" is a vital part of every liberal art student's education. The "Activity Awarded" may also be a part, but not a vital one. The honor organizations might operate effectively if too much importance is not given them. Just now in College Life, the "Activities Sought" give the student some practical work, the "Activity Awarded" is something to write home about.

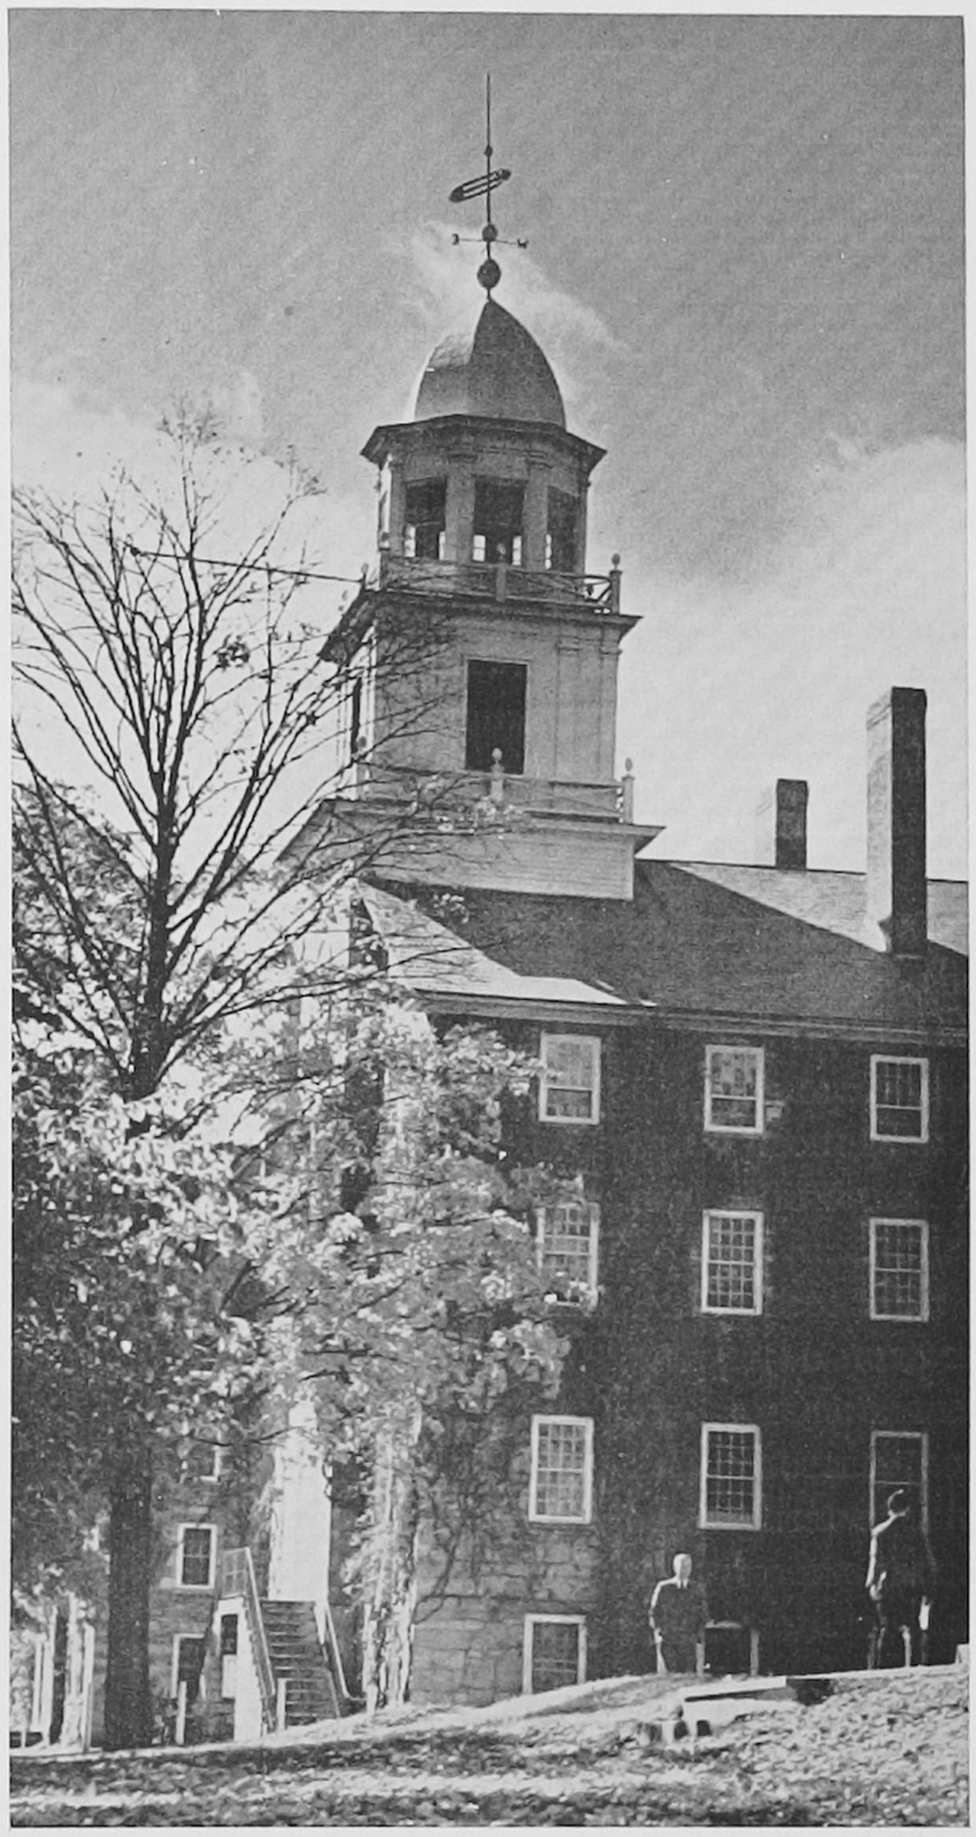
*The opinions of Mr. von Hartz do not necessarily reflect those of the NEWS LETTER.

enemy, it is only by intense study and research that the nature and extent of the danger can be understood and defenses against it perfected.

Timidity must not lead the scholar to stand silent when he ought to speak, particularly in the field of his competence. In matters of conscience and when he has truth to proclaim the scholar has no obligation to be silent in the face of popular disapproval. Some of the great passages in the history of truth have involved the open challenge of popular prejudice in times of tension such as those in which we live.

What applies to research applies equally to teaching. So long as an instructor's observations are scholarly and germane to his subject, his freedom of expression in his classroom should not be curbed. The university student should be exposed to competing opinions and beliefs in every field, so that he may learn to weigh them and gain maturity of judgment. Honest and skillful exposition of such opinions and beliefs is the duty of every instructor; and it is equally his privilege to express his own critical opinion and the reasons for holding it. In teaching, as in research, he is limited by the requirements of citizenship, of professional competence and good taste. Having met those standards, he is entitled to all the protection the full resources of the university can provide.



Whatever criticism is occasioned by these practices, the universities are committed to them by their very nature. To curb them, in the hope of avoiding criticism, would mean distorting the true process of learning and depriving society of its benefits. It would invite the fate of the German and Italian universities under Fascism and the Russian universities under Communism. It would deny our society one of its most fruitful sources of strength and welfare and represent a sinister change in our ideal of government.

Obligations and Responsibilities

We must recognize the fact that honest men hold differing opinions. This fundamental truth underlies the assertion and definition of individual rights and freedom in our Bill of Rights. How does it apply to universities? In the eyes of the law, the university scholar has no more and no less freedom than his fellow citizens outside a university. Nonetheless, because of the vital importance of the university to civilization, membership in its society of scholars enhances the prestige of persons admitted to its fellowship after probation and upon the basis of achievement in research and teaching. The university supplies a distinctive forum and, in so doing, strengthens the scholar's voice. When his opinions challenge existing orthodox points of view, his freedom may be more in need of defense than that of men in other professions. The guarantee of tenure to professors of mature and proven scholarship is one such defense. As in the case of judges, tenure protects the scholar against undue economic or political pressures and ensures the continuity of the scholarly process.

There is a line at which "freedom" or "privilege" begins to be qualified by legal "duty" and "obligation." The determination of the line is the function of the legislature and the courts. The ultimate interpretation and application of the First and Fourteenth Amendments are the function of the United States Supreme Court; but every public official is bound by his oath of office to respect and preserve the liberties guaranteed therein. These are a unique type of organization. For many reasons it must differ from a corporation created for the purpose of producing a salable article for profit. Its internal structure, procedures, and discipline are properly quite different from those of business organizations. It is not so closely integrated and there is no such hierarchy of authority as is appropriate to a business concern; the permanent members of a university are essentially equals.

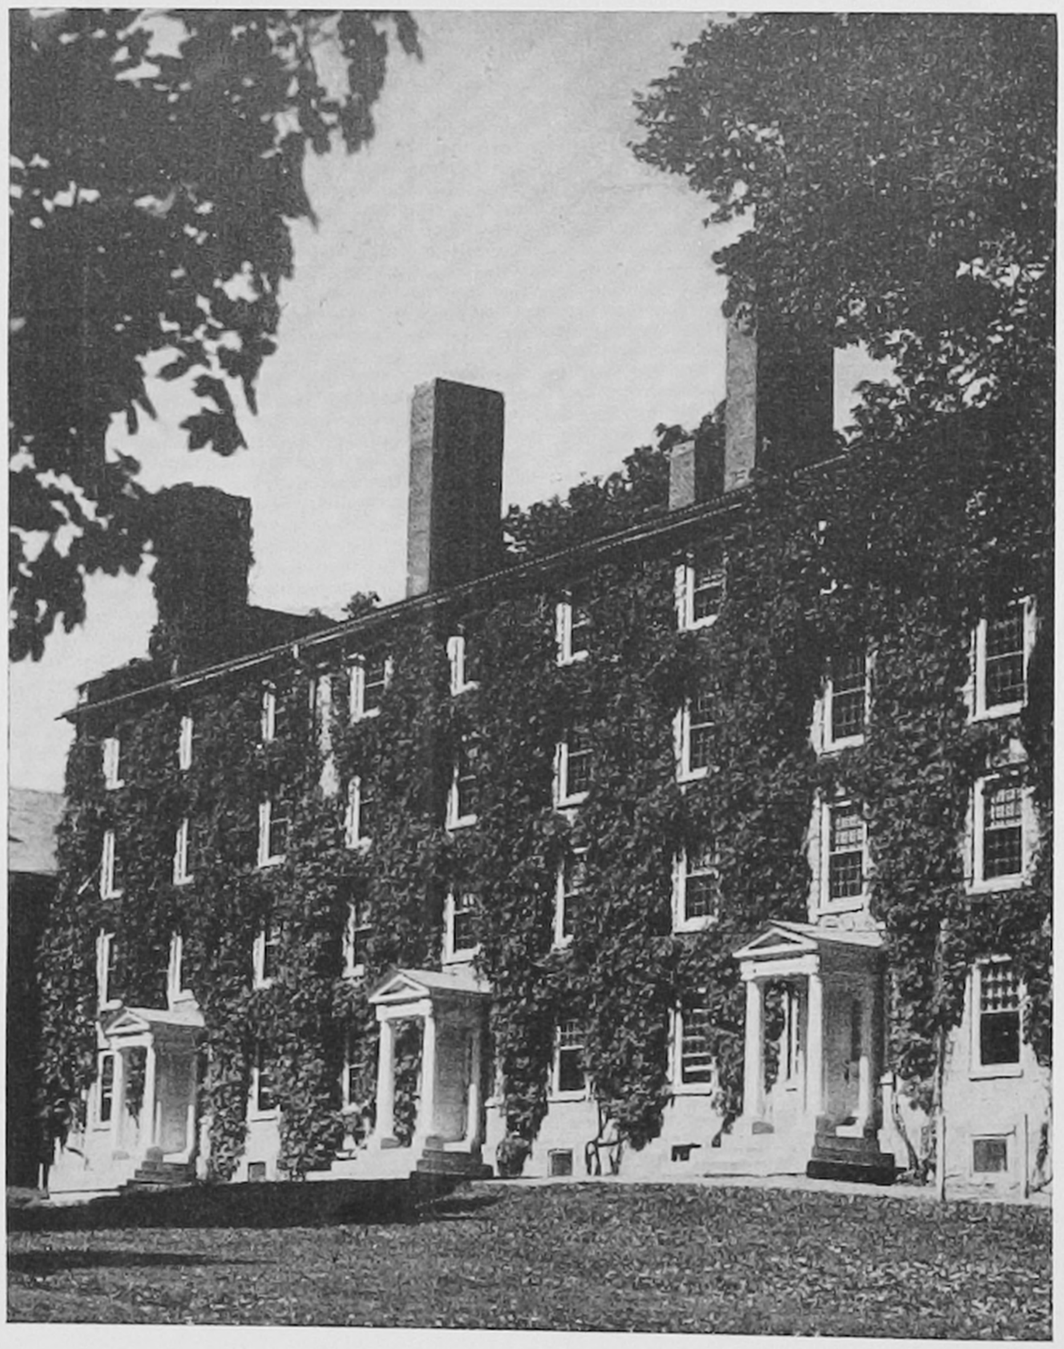
Like its medieval prototype, the modern American university is an association of individual scholars. Their effectiveness, both as scholars and as teachers, requires the capitalizing of their individual passion for knowledge and their individual competence to pursue it and communicate it to others. They are united in loyalty to the ideal of learning, to the moral code, to the country, and to its form of government. They represent diversified fields of knowledge, they express many points of view. Even within the same department of instruction there are not only specialists in various phases of the subject, but men with widely differing interests and outlook.

Free enterprise is as essential to intellectual as to economic progress. A university must therefore be hospitable to an infinite variety of skills and viewpoints, relying upon open competition among them as the surest safeguard of truth. Its whole spirit requires investigation, criticism, and presentation of ideas in an atmosphere of freedom and mutual confidence. This is the real meaning of "academic" freedom. It is essential to the achievement of its ends that the faculty of a university be guaranteed this freedom by its governing board, and that the reasons for the guarantee be understood by the public. To enjoin uniformity of outlook upon a university faculty would put a stop to learning at its source. To censor individual faculty members would put a stop to learning at its outlet.



For these reasons a university does not take an official position of its own either on disputed questions of scholarship or on political questions or matters of public policy. It refrains from so doing not only in its own but in the public interest, to capitalize the search for knowledge for the benefit of society, to give the individuals pursuing that search the freest possible scope and the greatest possible encouragement in their efforts to preserve the learning of the past and advance learning in the present. The scholar who pursues the search on these terms does so at maximum advantage to society. So does the student. To the scholar lie open new discoveries in the whole field of knowledge, to his student the opportunity of sharing in those discoveries and at the same time developing his powers of rational thought, intelligent judgment, and an understanding use of acquired knowledge. Thus essential qualities of learning are combined with essential qualities of citizenship in a free society.

The Mission of the Scholar

To fulfill their function the members of college and university faculties must continue to analyze, test, criticize, and reassess existing institutions and beliefs, approving when the evidence supports them and disapproving when the weight of evidence is on the other side. Such investigations cannot be confined to the physical world. The acknowledged fact that moral, social, and political progress have not kept pace with mastery of the physical world shows the need for more intensified research, fresh insights, vigorous criticism, and inventiveness. The scholar's mission requires the study and examination of unpopular ideas, of ideas considered abhorrent and even dangerous. For, just as in the case of deadly disease or the military potential of an the duty of universities and their members to cooperate in official inquiries directed to those ends. When the powers of legislative inquiry are abused, the remedy does not lie in non-cooperation or defiance; it is to be sought through the normal channels of informed public opinion.

The Present Danger

We have set forth the nature and function of the university. We have outlined its rights and responsibilities and those of its faculties. What are the implications for current anxiety over Russian Communism and the subversive activities connected with it?

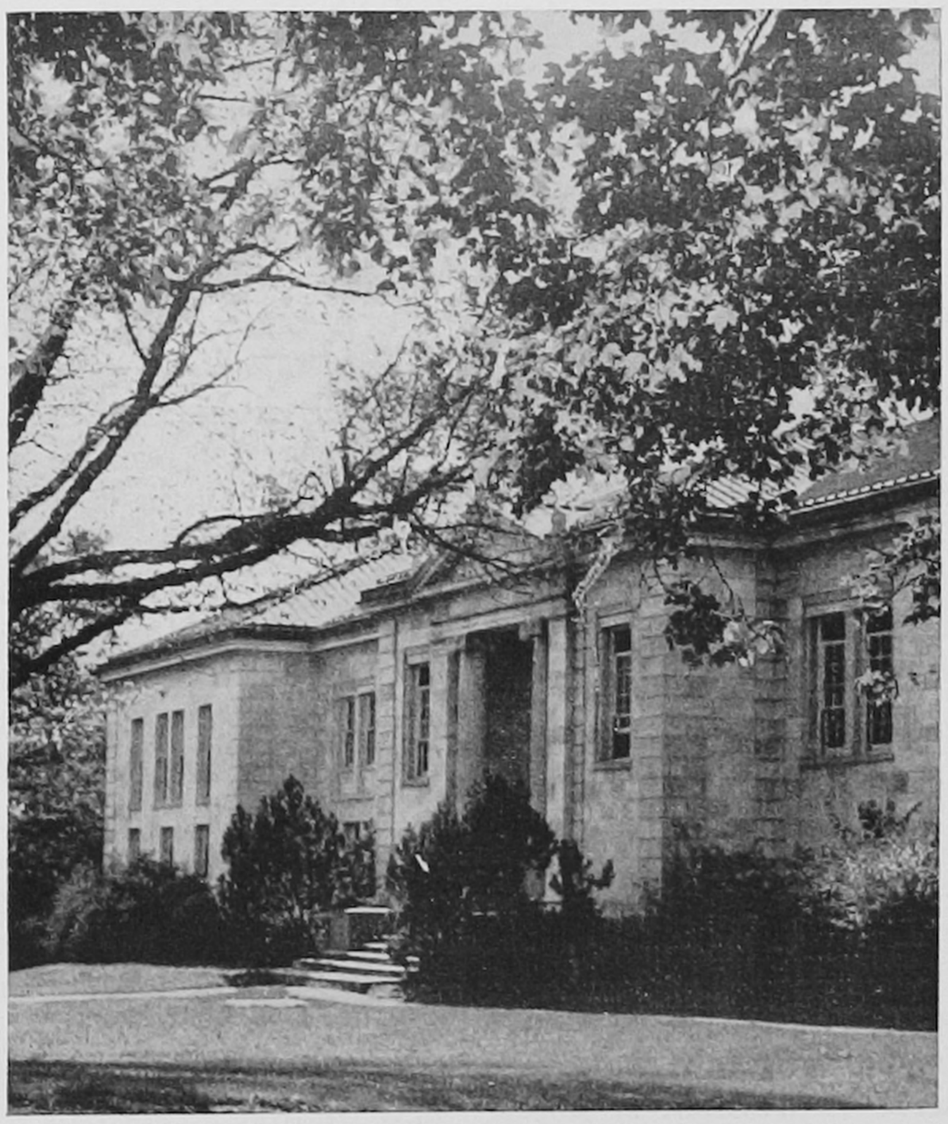
We condemn Russian Communism as we condemn every form of totalitarianism. We share the profound concern of the American people at the existence of an international conspiracy whose goal is the destruction of our cherished institutions. The police state would be the death of our universities, as of our government. Three of its principles in particular are abhorrent to us: the fomenting of world-wide revolution as a step to seizing power; the use of falsehood and deceit as normal means of persuasion; thought control—the dictation of doctrines which must be accepted and taught by all party members. Under these principles, no scholar could adequately disseminate knowledge or pursue investigations in the effort to make further progress toward truth.

Appointment to a university position and retention after appointment require not only professional competence but involve the affirmative obligation of being diligent and loyal in citizenship. Above all, a scholar must have integrity and independence. This renders impossible adherence to such a regime as that of Russia and its satellites. No person who accepts or advocates such principles and methods has any place in a university. Since present membership in the Communist Party requires the acceptance of these principles and methods, such membership extinguishes the right to a university position. Moreover, if an instructor follows communistic practice by becoming a propagandist for one opinion, adopting a "party line," silencing criticism or impairing freedom of thought and expression in his classroom, he forfeits not only all university support but his rights to membership in the university.

"Academic freedom" is not a shield for those who break the law. Universities must cooperate fully with law-enforcement officers whose duty requires them to prosecute those charged with offenses. Under a well-established American principle their innocence is to be assumed until they have been convicted, under due process, in a court of proper jurisdiction.

Unless a faculty member violates a law, however, his discipline or discharge is a university responsibility and should not be assumed by political authority. Discipline on the basis of irresponsible accusations or suspicion can never be condoned. It is as damaging to the public welfare as it is to academic integrity. The university is competent to establish a tribunal to determine the facts and fairly judge the nature and degree of any trespass upon academic integrity, as well as to determine the penalty such trespass merits.

As the professor is entitled to no special privileges in law, so also he should be subject to no special discrimination. Universities are bound to deprecate special loyalty tests which are applied to their faculties but to which others are not subjected. Such discrimination does harm to the individual and even greater harm to his university and the whole cause of education by destroying faith in the ideals of university scholarship.



Conclusion

Finally, we assert that freedom of thought and speech is vital to the maintenance of the American system and is essential to the general welfare. Condemnation of Communism and its protagonists is not to be interpreted as readiness to curb social, political, or eco- [Continued on page 19] not to be determined arbitrarily or by public outcry. The line thus drawn can be changed by legislative and judicial action; it has varied in the past because of prevailing anxieties as well as by reason of "clear and present" danger. Its location is subject to, and should receive, criticism both popular and judicial. However much the location of the line may be critized, it cannot be disregarded with impunity. Any member of a university who crosses the duly established line is not excused by the fact that he believes the line ill-drawn. When the speech, writing, or other actions of a member of a faculty exceed lawful limits, he is subject to the same penalties as other persons. In addition, he may lose his university status.

They Must Maintain Standards

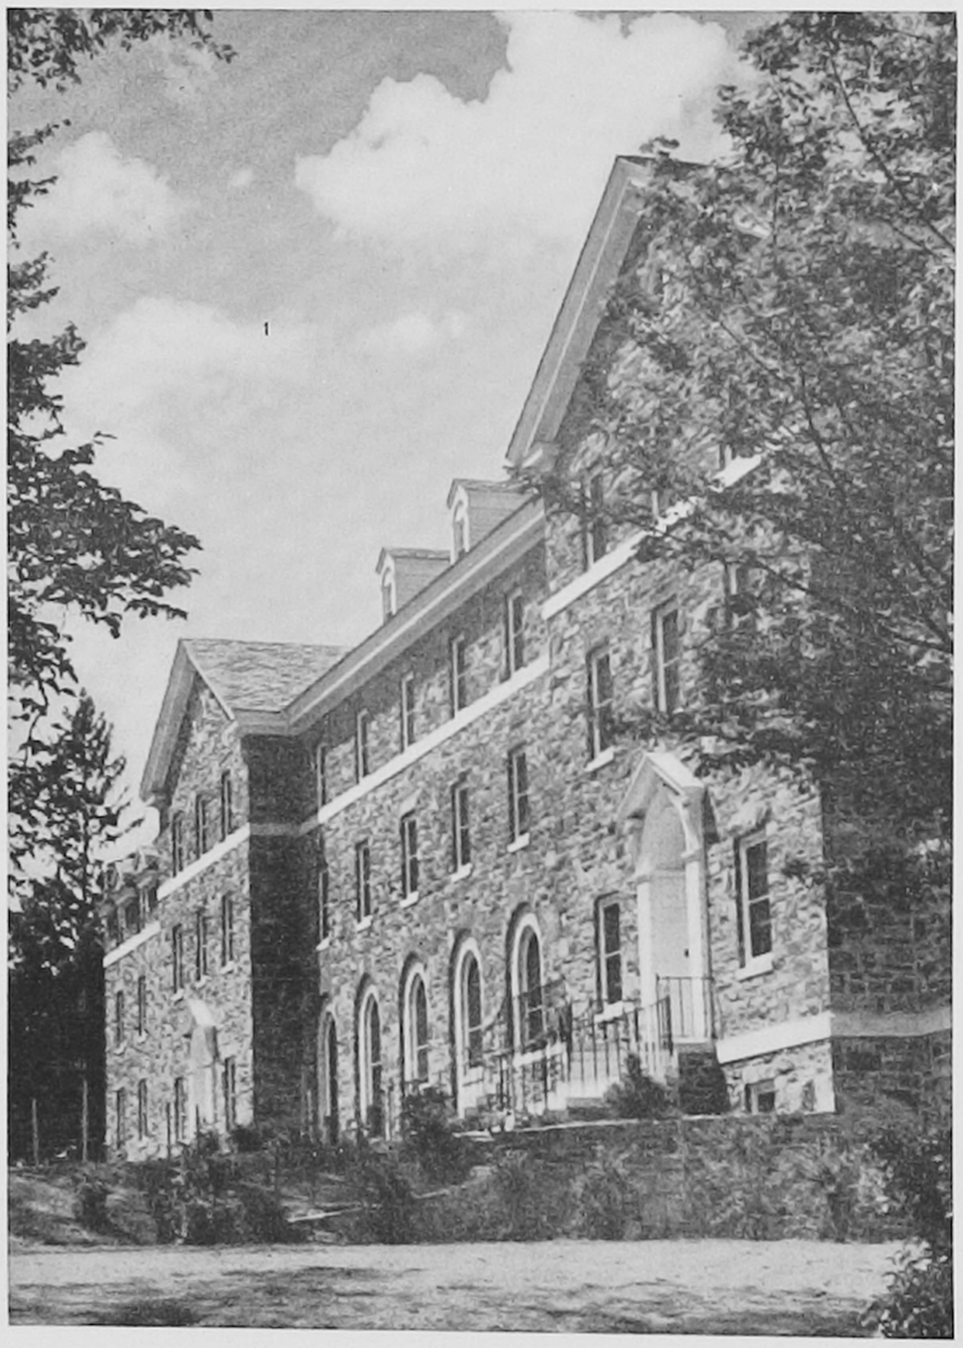
Historically the word "university" is a guarantee of standards. It implies endorsement not of its members' views but of their capability and integrity. Every scholar has an obligation to maintain this reputation. By illadvised, though not illegal, public acts or utterances he may do serious harm to his profession, his university or his college, to education, and to the general welfare. He bears a heavy responsibility to weigh the soundness of his opinions and the manner in which they are expressed. His effectiveness, both as scholar and teacher, is not reduced but enhanced if he has the humility and the wisdom to recognize the fallibility of his own judgment. He should remember that he is as much a layman as anyone else in all fields except those in which he has special competence. Others, both within and without the university, are as free to criticize his opinions as he is free to express them; "academic freedom" does not include freedom from criticism.

As in all acts of association, the professor accepts conventions which become morally binding. Above all, he owes his colleagues in the university complete candor and perfect integrity, precluding any kind of clandestine or conspiratorial activities. He owes equal candor to the public. If he is called upon to answer for his convictions, it is his duty as a citizen to speak out. It is even more definitely his duty as a professor. Refusal to do so, on whatever legal grounds, cannot fail to reflect upon a profession that claims for itself the fullest freedom to speak and the maximum protection of that freedom available in our society. In this respect, invocation of the Fifth Amendment places upon a professor a heavy burden of proof of his fitness to hold a teaching position and lays upon his university an obligation to reexamine his qualifications for membership in its society.

Universities and Colleges

In all universities and colleges faculties exercise wide authority in internal affairs. The greater their autonomy, the greater their share of responsibility to the public. They must maintain the highest standards and exercise the utmost wisdom in appointments and promotions. They must accept their share of responsibility for the discipline of those who fall short in the discharge of their academic trust.

The universities owe their existence to legislative acts and public charters. A State university exists by constitutional and legislative acts, an endowed university enjoys its independence by franchise from the state and by custom. The state university is supported by public funds. The endowed university is benefited by tax exemptions. Such benefits are conferred upon the universities not as favors but in furtherance of the public interest. They carry with them public obligation of direct concern to the faculties of the universities as well as to the governing boards.



Legislative bodies from time to time many scrutinize these benefits and privileges. It is clearly into a sophomore course in a modern language and occasionally one is ready for calculus or organic chemistry. These students have been allowed to substitute more advanced courses for freshman requirements but they have received no degree credit for the courses they have skipped. Our Faculty Educational Policy Committee has alerted the faculty to the realization that if this plan for Admission with Advanced Standing brings us students from the pilot schools qualified to enter sophomore courses and they eventually receive degree credit for courses taken in preparatory school, our present policy must, in all fairness, be reviewed.

FIDELITY TO FREEDOM

nomic investigation and research. To insist upon complete conformity to current beliefs and practices would do infinite harm to the principle of freedom, which is the greatest, the central, American doctrine. Fidelity to that principle has made it possible for the universities of America to confer great benefits upon our society and our country. Adherence to that principle is the only guarantee that the nation may continue to enjoy those benefits.

took place in the Opera House (now Town Hall) on Dec. 21st. and was again a great success. In the spring of 1910 the Club assisted in the revival of the spectacular Roman Drama first presented in 1900 under the direction of Professor Sanford. For this production a special outdoor stage was erected in the area across the road and parallel to Starr Hall. In this unusual setting, the performance highlighted the Commencement Weekend of 1910.

Professor Cady remembers

Professor-Emeritus Frank W. Cady of the English Dept. supplies a few details from these early years. He reports that during the second decade of the 20th Century, student-directed one-act plays were presented every few weeks in the Chapel Room of Old Chapel. At the beginning of the 1920's there was so much interest in dramatics that the College provided a home for the activity—the Playhouse. In December of 1924, Miss Hayden of the Music Dept. moved out the last of her pianos and dramatics moved in to stay. This move also introduced one of the most unusual surges of dramatic activity in the history of the College.

The course in Play Production was revived under Professor Cady's direction and he introduced for the first time a course in Modern Drama. Three hundred students responded to a call for participants in a program of plays. Members of the Production group were set to work directing groups of twenty each with the result that there were enough one-act plays for programs throughout the year. And there were opportunities for budding writers. Dean Storrs Lee, '28, remembers that several of his original one act plays were produced as well as those of Ray Bosworth, Charles Malam and others. In addition, there were class plays, full length plays performed by members of the Production class at the end of each term and a separate Commencement play. This continued through 1926 when Professor Cady had a Sabbatical leave of absence. William Northrop Morse was called in as his successor and in 1927 made Chairman of the first independent Department of Drama and Speech at Middlebury. This year was doubly eventful in that it also marked the establishment on campus of the first Chapter of Wig and Pen. For the first time, apparently, a curricular major in drama and an extra-curricular dramatic organization were joined in furthering the activity. However, the Club was de-emphasized in the following year when both functions were reorganized into a single unit by V. Spencer Goodreds. The Department with its separate major continued under his direction until 1941 when Henning Nelms became its Director for one year.

During the following year, as the College prepared itself for the World War II Navy occupation, both the independent Department and the major were again dropped, but a nucleus of courses and a program of dramatic productions were continued within the framework of the English Department. Wig and Pen was again revived and has functioned continuously until the present day.

As wartime tensions relaxed, old courses were re-admitted to the Drama curriculum and new ones added until a full complement was recognized in 1948 as a separate major within the English Department. This major is Liberal in its emphasis and is designed to offer students opportunities for creative expression. It hopes to supply a background for participation in and enjoyment of drama as a part of civilized living. It offers also a foundation of knowledge and experience in theatre arts for those who wish to continue in the field in any capacity. The theatre of today is not a matter of three boards and a passion. It is a matter of artistic unity—a unity which combines intellectual and emotional understanding of the written play with skillful expression through artistic media. The combination at its optimum should produce the best in living theatre, and a Liberal Arts program in Drama ought to aim, at least, at the best.

For this reason the Drama major at Middlebury is based on a full schedule of courses in dramatic literature presenting the development of drama and the theatre from the time of Aeschylus in Greece of the Fifth Century B.C. until our own day. In these courses an attempt is made to build an understanding of the idea, style and structure of the plays studied and to establish standards of evaluation. An effort is also made to capture the visual and auditory sense of the play by means of movies, pictorial records of productions, recordings by famous actors, classroom reading and occasional presentation of scenes from the plays studied by experienced members of the class for their fellow students. These literary courses comprise a total of eighteen hours. Fifteen of these are required of majors but are open to election by any upper classman. The enrollments range from thirty to one hundred.

The foundation of the theatre arts program are the two courses in Speech, Fundamentals and Public Speaking, one term each. In recent years these courses have become recognized as valuable training in communication and are recommended by several departments with the result that there are now six sections with a total of one hundred thirty one students. Half of these are taught by Fred Bowman, a new member of the Department who came to us from the University of Southern California last year. Mr. Bowman also teaches term courses in Argumentation and Discussion and directs the debating program.

Three sections of Speech are taught by James Van Wart, '48. Mr. Van Wart shares the responsibility for direction and production of the plays and teaches the second basic course in theatre arts, Dramatic Production. This is followed by advanced courses in Directing and Stagecraft and a year's seminar for Seniors. The latter affords an opportunity for advanced study and creative work in either the literary on theatrical divisions of drama studies. These in combinatior with a course in Playwriting comprise a total of twenty one hours. Majors are required to take three of these courses totalling twelve hours, but may elect others. A final requirement is a three hour seminar leading to the Comprehensive Examination of the Department.

It is this schedule of courses in combination with the activity of Wig and Pen and Players that has maintained the basic program of plays through the years. The Plays are too numerous to mention, but perhaps a few will reflect the struggle for a standard. Such plays as I Remember Mama, Noah, State of the Union, Pygmalion, Glass Menagerie, Taming of the Shrew, Juno and the Paycock, Electra, Madwoman of Chaillot, and, the most recent, Summer and Smoke, will long be remembered as products of the combination.

The struggle to improve the quality and variety of the drama courses continues and each new play is a challenge to achieve that illusive goal, artistic production. Many things still need to be accomplished and chief among these is a new theatre.
